Olympics Conclude, National Pride Shameful Again

Following the closing ceremony of the Milano Cortina 2026 Winter Olympic Games, Americans are working to manage feelings of obnoxious national pride that international athletic competitions invite, as they once again return to being "extremely embarrassing."

Analysts predict that the 2028 LA Games will provoke an even stronger reaction amongst US viewers.

After the games' conclusion, many Americans immediately took to social media to delete and renounce any patriotic sentiments that they had shared over the past month.

"The hockey team winning in overtime was one of the greatest moments of my life and I think I could feel the red, white, and blue pumping through my veins," said American Ronnie Meeks. "But then I saw all the players celebrating with Kash Patel and it reminded me that our country is actually really embarrassing."

The Ann Arbor Fire Department reports having responded to several out-of-control flag burnings in the last week.

"We had a really good three weeks there — didn't see a single flaming red, white, and blue sweater for the entire duration of the games." said Fire Chief Joey Puch, "but ever since the closing ceremony, it's felt like every hour we're responding to someone's flag-sweater bonfire that got a little too large."

"It's really inspiring to see Americans show off their skills on the global stage in a competition based on international cooperation and competitive integrity," claimed Olympics-watcher Kade Johnson. "Then half of the medalists start a GoFundMe for their living expenses the following week, and you're forced to remember that there's no scrap of dignity we can't relinquish."

At press time, experts project the general populace to be ready to show national pride again just in time for a group stage exit at the 2026 FIFA World Cup.

State Of The Union Apparently Not About Michigan Union

Michigan students who watched all one hour and 48 minutes of President Trump's State of the Union address were dismayed to learn that the speech was not, in fact, about the University's historic Union building.

"I thought Trump would at least address the absurdly long wait times at the Union Panera, or the abysmal lighting in the women's restrooms," said one confused student. "Instead, he kept talking about hating immigrants and trans people, who are all welcomed with open arms at the Michigan Union."

"Sure he's eroding the foundations of this nation's constitution," said another student. "But his decision to omit this gorgeous example of early 20th-century collegiate gothic architecture from his speech is unforgivable."

An Ipsos poll found overwhelmingly negative reactions to Trump's glaring omissions, with over 50% of Michigan women reporting that they only tuned into the speech to hear him address the lack of sufficient paper towels in the basement bathroom.

"I voted for him not once, not twice, but four times," said sophomore Cindy McCollum. "But tonight made me realize that he just doesn't care about everyday mid-semester, Blue Bucks-spending Michigan students. He's completely lost my support."

Students report feeling betrayed after Trump failed to mention the rising costs of Qdoba mix-ins.

At press time, the Michigan Union considered once again barring women from entry in an effort to regain Trump's favor.

Markley Toilet Insurgents Still Active In Region

Housing authorities received a ransom letter written in porcelain shards glued to toilet paper.

Reports indicate that toilet insurgents are still active in the 5th floor Scott bathroom of Mary Markley Hall, and are considering furthering their violent acts as tensions flare in the region.

According to one of the insurgents: "We aren't scared to break another one of your precious toilets. We made our demands clear: we need paper towel restocks and working plumbing. Until our demands are met, we will keep going stall to stall, shattering innocent porcelain. Clean bathrooms were promised to us in the housing contracts we signed six months ago."

"The toilet terrorism they are doing in there is unspeakable" said 5th floor resident Heath Beet. "People walk into that bathroom and they don't come out the same. They will destroy anything: toilets, showers, sinks, I mean they even broke the paper towel dispenser. This is beyond a violation of the housing code, it's a violation of natural bathroom rights."

An official statement from the University's Department of Public Safety and Security stated: "We will bring order to the Markley Toilets, no matter the cost." Reports indicate they are deploying a new wave of RAs to the floor, and are even considering drafting new RAs from the 2026 application pool. Houie Bliss, an RA on the floor was interviewed: "I've already done three tours of that bathroom, and there will never be peace. All those people want it shattered porcelain and violence. I pray DPSS assigns me to Baits, so I never have to see those horrors ever again."

At press time, DPSS organized an exchange with the insurgents, giving them paper towels in return for two intact urinals.

State Street Probably Due To Close Again Soon

Scientists project that, after nearly three consecutive months of being open and usable by both vehicles and pedestrians, State Street is likely "due" to be closed again soon.

"These kinds of events generally follow predictable cycles, with brief periods of intense activity followed by long stretches of dormancy," explained U-M researcher Gianna Barozzi. "These three months of using the road have been a wonderful treat, but we really should expect State Street to return to its natural state any day now, which is a pile of cordoned-off rubble."

"Personally, I love being able to walk from the Union to the Diag without taking a ten minute detour," said U-M ecologist Franklin Tortuga. "However, I'm not willing to put my personal convenience above my dedication to the environment. My research suggests that bulldozing State Street into a barren stretch of mud and gravel surrounded by caution tape is ultimately a necessity to protect native species threatened by habitat loss, like cement trucks and giant excavators."

Local elderly men are reportedly "eagerly anticipating" the return of their primary form of entertainment.

"State Street? Yeah, I'm stationed there practically every summer. There's some new installation or renovation or demolition every couple months," claimed Steve Marcus, an Ann Arbor resident who works in construction. "I've torn up its sidewalks, added bike lanes, installed new plumbing infrastructure, everything under the sun. Last fall, a student at the university accidentally dropped his ID onto the site while we were laying new asphalt, so we just opted to demolish the entire road again so he could retrieve it. Only added about 5 months to the timeline."

At press time, a crew in hi-vis safety vests carrying jackhammers and wheelbarrows was seen approaching State Street.

Bagely Found Wasted After Birthday Rager

Reports confirmed that beloved Alumni Center mascot, Bagely, was found inebriated after a full-blown birthday rager. The news comes after attendees reported strange behavior during his party at the Alumni Center.

"I'd never seen Bagely act that way. His eyes were bloodshot, and he kept asking everyone if they wanted to find out what flavor he was," said bash-goer Thomas Baker.

Another witness reported seeing the bagel "booking it to Rick's" after the Alumni Center closed for the day.

The morning after the party, the anthropomorphic bagel was found in the Ingalls Mall fountain, where a DPSS officer described him as "covered in dirt, seeds, and bite marks. The way he looked and smelled gave a whole new meaning to 'everything bagel.'"

As the face of Welcome Wednesdays at the Alumni Center, it's unclear whether Bagely will be able to return to his former self. "I know carrying the weight of being a campus celebrity must have put a lot of pressure on him. I just hope rehab can get him kneaded back into shape," said long-time fan Paisley Filmore.

At press time, Bagely has been placed in rehabilitation programs at both Bruegger's and Bo's Bagels.

Bagely claimed that he only tested positive for opioids because of the poppy seeds covering his body.

Guy Reading Book For The First Time Keeps Leaving It Out For You To See

Within the past week, Junior Angelica Morano has expressed several complaints about her classmate, Jace, and his new reading hobby. Angelica reports, "Everytime he sits down for class he puts the book he's reading onto a really visible position on the table. Then, every time class is over he puts it into his back-pocket, but positions it so that the title is still legible. I just know he wants me to ask about it so bad."

Other classmates have similar complaints, with Junior Jessie Tsai agreeing: "I get it. You've discovered what reading is. Why do I have to make eye-contact with the guy on your book cover every five seconds because of it?"

When asked how his hobby is going, Jace said, "Owning a book has really changed me. I can't even begin to imagine what reading a book will do. There's so much out there! "Yeah. Like, this year I plan to buy Infinite Jest, Crime and Punishment, Blood Meridian– all the great American novels. Unfortunately, not all of them will fit in my back pocket, but I'm sure I'll figure something out."

"Maybe this will actually spark a love for writing as well," Jace theorized, "I've bought a notebook to put in my other backpocket. No, I haven't started writing in it yet, but when I do… watch out world!"

At press time Jace was seen opening his GoodReads account, before quickly switching over to Instagram Reels.

Jace unwittingly revealed his lack of literary experience to several classmates after referring to his current read as a "chapter book."

LSA To Hold Unemployment Fair

Dean Rosario Ceballo announced last Wednesday that LSA will hold an "Unemployment Fair" in place of their usual Career Fair to better connect students with a vast array of opportunities in the field of joblessness.

"Attending the University of Michigan prepares students for their future careers," said Ceballo. "But considering the current job market, we believe our resources may be better spent preparing students for their future unemployment."

The Winter 2026 Unemployment Fair will feature a variety of booths that provide students with guidance on filling out unemployment forms, navigating conversations with disappointed family members, and adjusting to hometown life after graduation. The fair will also feature several w*rkshops, including a session to help students get started on their podcast/novel that they will talk about constantly but never follow through with.

"One of the most popular and socially acceptable booths by far is 'Grad School,'" commented Ceballo. "No specific university, subject area, or graduate degree type will be represented at our fair. We are rather just floating the concept of going to grad school at some point maybe. And right next to it we plan to feature another similar, enticing booth called 'Taking a Gap Year to Study for the LSAT/GRE/MCAT.'"

"Definitely swing by my crypto booth," said self-described tech investment professional Nick Cromwell. "Not to toot my own horn, but so far I've only lost thirty thousand dollars trading crypto! And so can you."

At press time, Dean Ceballo was reportedly in talks with League of Legends to provide sponsorship for the Unemployment Fair.

Co-Op Party Attendee Embracing Redistributive Approach With Vape Smoke

Last weekend, co-op party attendee Lance Voorhees was seen embracing socialist principles as he hit his vape in the house's crowded living room.

"I thought it was really kind of him," said Ilana Morris, a fellow party-goer, "I haven't been able to get a vape in a couple of days, so I really appreciated the opportunity to smell his blue razz. At one point he just looked straight at me and exhaled right into my face, which he really didn't have to do."

Voorhees reported that several people came up to him during the party to praise his commitment to communist values.

"At one point I did a really sick fat cloud and someone came up to me and congratulated me on being one of the only people in there to really 'understand Kapital' which is cool, I guess. I don't really really have a preference for them over lowercase letters.

Peter Brant, the co-op's president, lauded Voorhees' generosity, saying that he often sees party attendees blowing smoke into their sleeves which is, "peak bourgeois behavior."

However, some counter-revolutionary party attendees did not appreciate Vorhees's progressive ideals.

"I was having a really hard time seeing my guitar," said Justin Franks, whose band was performing at the party, "like one hit is like sure, fine, but he just kept going and going. The whole room was just filled with this fruity smoke and people were starting to cough."

At press time, Voorhees was seen spilling his can of Busch Lite down a girl's shirt, who thanked him for his commitment to mutual aid.

Gigachad Looksmaxxer Gets Grade Mogged By Chudcel Dean After Jestermaxxing And Failing All Classes

Campus Looksmaxxer Kaden Peterson, a sophomore in LSA, recently got "grade mogged by Chudcel Dean Jack Breslin" after reportedly "Jestermaxxing" to the point where he "failed all of his classes."

Peterson, who is also a Kick streamer, took time off from bonesmashing after he got "grade mogged" by Breslin. According to Peterson, he is currently "copemaxxing from [his] rise in cortisol after receiving the news that [he] was failing out of school."

"That academiafraud was just mad that I exposed him for inflating fake stats to protect frame," Peterson said. "After he got skullmogged, he knew I wasn't deeplocked into my studies, and attacked my cortisol levels."

According to Dean Breslin, he is "unsure how Peterson even got into the University of Michigan."

"Looking at Peterson's admissions file, all he did was send a picture of his traps with the quote 'If you don't let me in, you're subhuman,'" Breslin said. "When I met with him to discuss his grades, he was just beating his jaw with a hammer and telling me that he 'moggs' me."

According to Peterson, he tried to "grademaxx at the start, but dodged irreversible PSL bleed by a millimeter."

"To deeplock in class, I smoked meth before my Econ 402 final," Peterson said. "Looking at the Solow growth model confirmed I was chudmaxxing, and it spiked my cortisol levels and decreased my aura levels, so I knew I had to jestermaxx."

At press time, Peterson stated that he would be transferring to Arizona State University, and that he hopes he "doesn't get frame mogged by some frat leader."

U-M TPUSA Chapter Offers "All-American" Alternative Graduation

The University of Michigan's chapter of Turning Point USA has recently announced that the organization will be hosting an "All-American" alternative to the official U-M Spring Commencement.

"Our alternative Commencement ceremony will promote only family, faith, and freedom," announced TPUSA student correspondent Trent Cliffords. "Of course, the event will be pre-recorded in Atlanta in front of a studio audience, but will air at the same time as the official ceremony, so you can save yourself the trouble of being honored in the Big House and just tune in to our livestream on YouTube or Kick."

"I'm glad I have an event that actually represents my values, instead of whatever DEI bullshit the University of Wokechigan is planning for the 'mainstream' graduation ceremony," explained Connie Federer, an LSA Senior and TPUSA member. "This graduation will be for recognizing students with real achievements like cultivating a personal connection with Christ or selling the most tickets to a Republican senator's campaign rally. There won't be any time wasted on things like cutting-edge scientific breakthroughs or award-winning published work."

"The alternative graduation is an opportunity for students who have been marginalized in academia for conservative beliefs, like myself, to graduate with the rest of our peers," said Hejj Pfund, a 6th-year LSA undergrad. "It's essentially an open secret that the First Year Writing Requirement was designed by Marxists to weed conservatives out of the university."

Final reports claim that Kid Rock is to be awarded an honorary degree at the ceremony.

Deadliest Season On Record As Five Killed Hiking Up Mason Hall Stairs

Mason Hall is expected to be outfitted with a ski lift and several alpine shelters in an effort to reduce casualties.

In what seems on track to be a particularly deadly season, a record of five casualties were reported last year on the steps of Mason Hall, an increase of 100% from the previous year.

Senior Katelyn Joyner, a veteran hiker of Mason Hall stairways, said she has seen many students meet their fate on the slopes of the classroom building's interior stairwells. "A lot of people start the journey unprepared. It's a deceptive route, y'know, because let's say you're going up to the third floor. You've prepared to climb up three floors, right? But you arrive to find that you're starting on the ground floor, floor zero."

Junior Aya Saad died due to high altitude pulmonary edema. Her final text message, sent to a group chat of acquaintances she would have described as "friends," read, "theres sooo many stars in mh guys fml i. feel lighheadd."

Jacob Horskald, who was interviewed during a stay at the base camp on the landing between the second and third floors, reported that he was overwhelmed by the task of summiting the Mason Hall stairs. "I got up the first flight pretty easy, but two was rough man. I don't know if I have the strength to go on. I already missed my class anyway, so there's really no point now."

At press time, a post-class avalanche of students tumbling down the stairs resulted in two additional casualties.

Michigan Hopscotch Club Introduces Third Round Of Interviews

The Michigan Hopscotch Club (MHC), which meets in Mason Hall on Wednesday evenings at 10 P.M., recently announced via Instagram that they have introduced a third hour-long interview portion to the already rigorous application process required to join the club.

The additional step comes on top of the existing requirements of four 200-word essays about the intricacies of hopscotch, two formal interview rounds, and a speed dating event with current members of the 14-person organization.

When asked for comment, MHC president Bumper Sparkson remarked: "I mean, we all knew this was coming, right? Our acceptance rate has dropped to 3%. Everyone's aware of the prestige, acclaim, and job prospects that come with being a part of this, so it's only fair to have as rigorous of an application as possible. If you're looking for placement at a top hopscotch firm postgrad, this is the place for you."

Candidates were nonetheless intimidated by the added layer of difficulty. Sarah Hoopwell, a fourth-generation Hopscotch legacy, shared: "Oh yeah, I'd say I'm pretty prepared. Obviously I've been doing hopscotch technical prep since the summer, I've read just about all of the guidebooks. I'm a little behind on networking, but I'm hoping if I really nail the skip from the 2-3 square to the 4 in the performance interview then that'll make up for it."

At press time, the Michigan Turtle Enthusiasts were also seen preparing to email out the link for the second round of coffee chats.

Internal reports also suggest that advisors are pushing to add a Middle Level Writing credit and a Third Language credit to the LSA graduation requirements.

On February 16th, 2026, academic advisors around the country announced a new initiative to guarantee that all undergraduate students will now take at least 6 years to earn their degree.

Despite initial public outrage, advisors maintain that students and parents "won't notice significant changes."

"This policy has actually been around since the 80's," says Paula Johnson, an advisor at Harvard University. "The only difference is that we're finally being transparent about it."

At the University of Michigan, many students say they aren't surprised. Devin, a senior studying Civil Engineering, was just informed a few days ago that he would no longer be graduating with his peers in May.

"In freshman year, my advisor put me in DANCE 129: Twerking to 'broaden my horizons'," Devin recalled. "Now I'm finding out I'm missing a lab requirement that's only offered every other year."

"This is a massive improvement to our advising program," said a spokesperson for the College of Engineering. "We've decreased the amount of years to graduate from 10 to only 8." When questioned about the contradiction between the advisors' self-reported goals of 6 years, the spokesperson said to send an email for the next business day instead.

At press time, this announcement was being celebrated by fraternity pledgemasters, education majors, and university finance administrators.

Guy Who Went To Elite New England Boarding School Before UMich Kind Of An Underachiever If You Think About It

A recent study indicates that wealthy LSA freshman Jimothy Matson — who hails from a Bay Area family of tech CEOs and attended the prestigious Phillips Exeter Academy before coming to U of M — is "actually kind of an underachiever" in the grand scheme of things.

"He always brags about how all his old classmates were the kids of this or that CEO or important politician," said Eric Robinson, a close friend of Matson's. "We're talking Apple, Palantir, half the Senate, he basically has the contact info of the entire deep state. How do you have all that and not even get into one of the shitty Ivy League schools like Dartmouth?"

Matson does have several connections to ultra-prestigious universities. Notably, his grandma is the dean of admissions at Harvard, and previously admitted all of his older siblings. However, she declined to admit Matson, citing a "terribly sullen and rude demeanor at family Thanksgiving last year."

Matson's parents have expressed disappointment, but try to remain supportive. "It's sad that he didn't even manage to get into Ross, but we all need a bit of time to figure life out," said mother Eleanor Matson. "He's talked about wanting to join student government or the school newspaper's opinion section. It sounds useless, but as long as he turns his life around by the end of college and gets a job at Goldman Sachs, I think he'll be fine."

Matson has disputed these underachieving allegations, claiming that he "wanted the big state school experience and sports scene" and "wasn't even really trying anyways."

Campus Chipotle Doesn't Have Chips, Steak, Toilets, Walls

Senior Cate Walsh was surprised at the lack of food options and facility features upon entering the State Street Chipotle last Friday.

Walsh reported that she first noticed that the store no longer had any walls. "I thought maybe they were trying a new open concept thing? I mean, people were still ordering and the employees were still working like normal. I walked up to the counter to ask about the lack of… um… structure, but they just started yelling loudly about how they had no more protein, guac, bags, or bowls. If I wanted a bowl I just had to take the food in my hands."

Upon hearing this, Walsh decided not to purchase her intended meal, and instead decided to try her hand at asking if the bathroom was still available. "I mean, without the walls and all, I wasn't really sure," explained Walsh. "The worker took me by the collar and shouted that there were no longer any toilets available either as of an hour ago."

Walsh left the store confused and hungry. "It was really strange, I mean, more people kept lining up and didn't seem to mind eating out of their hands… they all had Airpods in and were glued to their phones, so maybe they just didn't notice? I don't go to that location a lot, so maybe this is a regular thing? The infrastructure disappearing throughout the day? No one cared but me."

At press time, an on-campus source confirmed that the store no longer appeared to have any employees, which has led to students serving themselves.

Starbucks Launches New Drink, "Like A Latte, But With AI"

Starbucks held a press conference last Sunday to announce that it would become an AI-first brand moving forward. Through its partnerships with Anthropic and Nvidia, the coffee company has created a new AI-powered drink called the "lAItte".

In a similar fashion to every other tech company, Starbucks will also remove all non-AI options from its menu. CEO Brian Niccol said, "Why would anyone ever want a drink without AI in it? By keeping other options, we would just be throwing money away."

The new drink will track caffeine levels, drinking habits, spending history, location, BAC, internet searches, political affiliation, and bi-curious thoughts. This is possible through the required Star+ app, which also offers a paid version that actually lets customers view some of the metrics before they're sold to Palantir.

The drink includes a voice assistant, Melona, designed to upgrade the coffee-drinking experience, equipped with liquid cooling and RGB lighting. One Starbucks customer stated after trying the drink: "It's just a fucking latte, but half the cup is a GPU." While some customers are unsatisfied, others are enjoying the change. "I fell in love with Melona. She just got me, right down to my elbow kink and thoughts on immigration," revealed Cyrus Albenki, who first visited Starbucks after the change. "She's really encouraged me to live life to the fullest: trying new drinks, buying more merchandise."

At press time, Starbucks began offering a 50 percent discount for the drink, now only $44.95.

Long Strand Of Hair In Urinal Most Likely Pubic Hair From Abnormally Large Person

After careful deliberation, area public restroom user Jake Bollocks has come to the conclusion that the large strand of hair he noticed in a McDonald's urinal was "most likely a pubic hair from an abnormally large man."

"I just don't know what else it could've been," said Bollocks. "Sometimes I find a pubic hair or two on the rim of my toilet at home, so I'm guessing the one I noticed at McDonald's just happened to detach and float down to the urinal while this extremely unkempt and large man was taking a leak."

"The more I think about it, this might be evidence of Bigfoot," continued Bollocks. "I would have thought Bigfoot might prefer to pee in the woods but maybe he's more sophisticated than we give him credit for."

Travolta further speculated that "maybe [the hair] just grew there naturally."

Employees at the McDonald's don't remember seeing any giant men going to the restroom, but don't want to discount Mr. Bollock's theory. "I think our manager is like 6 foot," said line cook Don Travolta. "He's kinda weird, so maybe he likes to grow out his pubes."

Bollocks has also developed a few other theories about where the long strand of hair could have come from, including a "potty-trained Afghan Hound."

At press time, Bollocks was seen measuring a strand of his own pubic hair.

Thrill Seekers Turn To Lowest-Rated Uber Drivers

Following a weekly pub crawl, Ann Arbor local Vanya Merchant and two other students ordered an Uber back home from driver Colbert Iren, despite his 2.5-star rating on the app, and described the ride as "one of the best experiences of [her] life."

"I was pretty wasted at the time, but he was swerving in and out of lanes, running red lights. At one point, I think he hit a man. I've never felt more alive," claimed Merchant.

Merchant has since taken dozens of Uber rides, none of which exceeded two stars. Others have followed suit, causing amusement park attendance to drop by 5 percent and Eyes Wide Shut orgies to drop by 43 percent. According to Uber's analytics, these rides arrive an average of 10 minutes earlier than higher-rated drivers, assuming they make it to the destination at all.

Reports suggest the feeling of euphoria during a ride is common. "I used to wait to start my exams until half of the time was up to get my kicks, but this is way more fun," said one rider after jumping out the back of a moving Honda.

Critics have raised concerns about crashes and a possible Uber stock bubble. Some thrill-seekers also have complaints, with one explaining that "there are risks with this method. Sometimes the rating is based on the smell of the car instead of the driving ability."

At press time, a majority of Uber drivers have begun driving recklessly to capitalize on this new market, leaving intoxicated cowards to uneasily scooter home.

Sexy New Voice Worth Life-Destroying Illness

A local woman on the brink of complete respiratory collapse has developed a devastatingly seductive quality to her voice, much to her pleasant surprise.

"Yes, I did wake up with a 104-degree fever. I also can't hear anything or breathe," purred the newly empowered woman, a student named Ashley Torres. "Yet, despite it all, I feel quite unstoppable. Say, Johnny boy, won't you stay a little while longer and give this poor lonely girl some much-needed company?"

Many reported seeing Torres engaging in various sexy-sickly activities, including gauging her own temperature by striking various provocative poses while pressing the back of her hand delicately to her forehead, as well as dressing in slinky gowns and silk arm-length gloves while periodically excusing herself to the restroom to go "eject from both ends at once."

Despite its difficulties, her new allure seems to have charmed suitors successfully.

"We were at Rick's, and I heard her trying to do a Louis Armstrong impression from across the bar. Her slinky gown and silk arm-length gloves were immediately irresistible to me," said Derek Li, a student who recently became romantically involved with Torres. "Her forehead was hot and flushed to the touch, and covered with a light, sticky sheen of sweat. We whispered sweet nothings to each other, her in that low, sultry tone, before she accidentally coughed an orange glob into my drink. I can't say I minded. Ever cracked a raw egg in beer before?"

At press time, Li, who has since developed a new cough, was seen wiping away the dried, bloody mucus beneath Torres's nose to help her draw a beauty mark on with eyeliner.

Migrating Canadian Goose Detained By ICE

The ordeal has jeopardized Honk Honk Honk's family business of selling high end winter jackets.

A Canadian Goose was detained by ICE at Norfolk International Airport in November, sparking outrage among civil rights groups, ecologists, and people who've seen the movie "Fly Away Home."

The goose, identified as Honk Honk Honk, was stopped upon landing during what his wife described as the family's annual migration vacation. "The arrest occurred in front of my client's wife and two young children," claims Neil Wheeler, the lawyer retained by the goose's family, who is seeking 200,000 pounds of dandelion greens in damages.

Honk Honk Honk's wife is originally from the United States. "Our children were born in Florida," she said in a tearful statement. "We've split our time between Canada and the States for 14 migration seasons now. This is the first time anything like this has happened."

When questioned about crossing the border, Honk Honk Honk's wife cited safety concerns. "Canadian climates are unsafe for raising young goslings," she explained. "We were just seeking better opportunities."

ICE officials defended the detention, claiming they were "protecting the jobs of American Geese," which include attacking passing pedestrians, defecating on golf courses, and stealing your sandwich after a long day at work.

Legal experts note that the Migratory Bird Treaty Act of 1918 technically protects geese crossing international borders, with many saying the arrest violates centuries of positive migration relations between Canada and the U.S.

Hottest Winter Accessory Is A Wet Cough

Winter's hottest trends include everything from peppermint mochas and knee-length parkas to loud, wet coughs.

"I was embarrassed when I first noticed my cough after coming back from break," said U-M Junior Cate Rennett, who has had her cough since December. "But when I went to a nearly silent lecture and heard everyone else coughing, I felt right at home." Several students had similar responses, saying the widespread sickness was becoming a fashion statement.

"I coughed in class once, and the next day everyone around me was coughing. I guess I'm just ahead of the trends," claimed Junior Tatum Kramer. "Nothing sexier than seeing someone wheeze and spray out a mist full of viruses and microbes in a crowded indoor setting."

"These students will put their mouths on anything—chain-smoking joints, sharing drinks at the bar, using tinder." said Ann Arbor physician Dr. Brian Thorn. "At this point, I wouldn't be surprised if licking doorknobs became the next trend. I've seen students on their third case of bronchitis this year, all in the name of fashion."

At press time, Rennett said she plans to continue using the same toothbrush and "have more oral contact with complete strangers."

"This Traffic Is Ridiculous," Mutters Guy Getting Cheers For Honking Near Protest

Paterno is also reported to have shown his support for local animal rights prevention groups and mandatory drunk driving advocates.

Despite getting cheers from a group of nearby protestors, recent reports indicate that local man Dave Paterno was only honking because he was angry at traffic congestion.

"Traffic was ridiculous that day," recalled Paterno. "I was trying to hustle home after a hard day's work but the traffic had other plans I guess. I find that honking a bunch helps. It's funny, I remember there was also this gathering of people and they kept clapping and whooping at me for some reason."

"We love our allies," exclaimed local protestor Sadie Taylors. "Not many people in Ann Arbor support expanding gun rights to our nation's youth, so we're so thankful this man contributed to our cause by honking. As we always say, there's nothing more American than giving kids guns."

Many bystanders were upset at Paterno's honking however. "How could someone give any attention to those protestors?" said one. "Clearly this man is deranged and wants to see the world burn," said another.

At press time, Paterno was seen blaring his horn "just for the hell of it."

Vanity Plate Actually Pretty Introspective

Witnesses have reported that the vanity plate affixed to a 2017 Dodge Durango SRT, which reads "EMOTNLY UNAV," is "actually quite introspective."

"I know it's called a 'vanity plate,' but that label just feels reductive," said pedestrian Marissa Landry. "A person who's able to recognize their shortcomings, and goes so far as to pay to advertise them to the public doesn't sound very vain to me."

The plate has inspired some motorists to self-reflect. "When I first saw it, I almost called the cops," said local driver Jim Richards. "But then I decided to call my mom instead. That plate made me realize the reason I wasn't spending time with my elderly parents was because their decline reminded me of my own inevitable mortality, which drummed up some really deep insecurities about the impact my life has had on others."

The Durango's original plate, "PRN ADCT," was rejected at the DMV.

Despite the plate containing more characters than allowed by Michigan law, police have declined to issue a citation. "We were totally going to bust his ass," said local sheriff Tom McKinney. "But then we got to thinking, and it became clear that our compulsion to ruthlessly enforce menial laws stems from a deep-rooted fear that the patriarchal ideals we aspire to are profoundly misguided."

At press time, the Durango was seen pulling into the parking lot of a psychiatrist's office.

Woman Refuses To Buy Child-Labor-Made Clothes, Finds Kids "Icky"

Local woman Kate Stevenson has reportedly not been seen buying child-labor-made clothes at the mall, finding anything touched by children gross.

Stevenson, a formerly avid consumer of fast fashion, had bought at least two items of clothing a week for the past six years, until she discovered the prevalence of child labor in the industry.

Stevenson was appalled. "I try not to even look at kids, I can't stand the thought of wearing something their grubby little hands were sewing for hours." After further research, Stevenson was hard-pressed to find a suitable clothing choice among her usual brands. "I just can't believe they would let kids in the factory. What if they pick their noses?"

When contacted, factory owners rejected the idea that their workers were unhygienic. "I personally supervise the kids as they go through the bleach machine before every shift," one manager stated. "By the time they get to the clothes, they are free of all living bacteria and skin cells."

Activist groups have begun to refocus their efforts, releasing attack ads on children rather than on the immoral practices of corporations, claiming that the approach has found success with people who "don't do politics." They have also launched the site "childrenaregross.com," highlighting alternative clothing companies that are "Guaranteed Cootie-Free."

At press time, several factories in Indonesia have replaced their workforce with the elderly, which they hope will be a "more endearing" and "nearly as exploitable demographic."

Study Finds Runny Nose Just One Sniffle Away From Being Cleared

A new study published by the NIH has found that 98% of runny noses can be stopped if patients sniffle just one more time.

"Our data indicate that the overwhelming majority of patients suffering from rhinorrhea were tantalizingly close to clearing their nose of snot and breathing freely," said lead researcher Dr. Angela Choo. "If they just sharply inhaled once more, we're confident they'll feel like a million bucks."

The study analyzed treatment options for over 800 individuals infected with the common cold, flu, COVID-19, and other upper-respiratory viruses. Results showed that traditional methods like tissues and nasal sprays were only up to 40% effective at remediating symptoms. But according to the researchers, "one more good sniff" was proven to "blow other methods out of the water."

Scientists did warn that this treatment was not without risk. "Unfortunately society has stigmatized this traditional remedy, and many study participants reported feeling unwelcome in public spaces like libraries and crowded buses," said Dr. Choo. "We hope this research can change the public's perception. I mean who would ask a cancer patient to stop chemo because 'they're disturbing library patrons?'"

At press time, doctors indicated that they were close to a breakthrough in gastrointestinal research. "Preliminary data suggests that the cure for bloating may be as simple as farting one more time," said principal investigator Frederic Gaspaser.

Clown Happy, Actually

Flippo is often seen driving around in his car with ten of his closest and happiest clown friends.

Area entertainer Flippo the Clown, in spite of stereotypes typically assigned to his profession, reports that he is "actually quite happy."

Flippo says he always knew he wanted to be a clown and has never regretted his choice of career for a moment. "Yeah, I mean, it's a pretty good gig," the clown said. "I get to wear crazy outfits and make people laugh at fun community events like kids' birthday parties or town fairs. I love my job and my life. I don't know why people don't believe me when I say that."

Jeremy Knotswitch, Flippo's neighbor, has long had a strong suspicion that Flippo is deeply depressed. "He pretends to be fine, but I don't buy it," Knotswitch said. "Like when that mime girl broke up with him and took the invisible silverware and the invisible couch and the invisible car and the invisible TV, he just shrugged and said he'd been wanting a TV he could actually watch anyway. But I know he was sad because they were together so long. No way he really believes that people change and that moving on is best for everyone sometimes or whatever."

Circus ringleader W. Huxley Derring used to employ Flippo as an acrobatic clown in his traveling show. "Really he was quite unsettling," Derring said. "I have never, in all my great many years in this noble business, seen a clown smile as much as him."

At press time, Flippo was seen watering his garden through a flower pinned to his lapel while humming a joyful tune.

Homemade Dish Kind Of Tasty After Adding Entire Wedge Of Parm

Critics are now also suggesting replacing the actual dish itself with even more parmesan.

According to leading food critics, nearly all home cooking can be made "surprisingly edible" by mixing in an entire wedge of grated parmesan cheese.

"After consulting critics with some of the most refined palates in the world, we've confirmed there isn't a single dish that can't be made serviceably appetizing by adding at least a quarter pound of ground up parmesan," said Gwendal Poullennec, international director of the Michelin Guide.

Critics also observed that the impact of "drowning dishes in parmesan" could be multiplied if the cheese was finely aged or "belonged to the cook's roommate."

This revelation has been a "huge boon" for home cooks worldwide. "I used to avoid cooking at all costs," said university student Angus Bates. "But now that I've learned about adding 8-12 ounces of shredded parmesan, my dishes are almost tasty."

Professional recipe authors have taken note of this groundbreaking development. "We've added an extra step to all of our recipes that just says 'add parmesan to taste,'" said Emily Weinstein, editor in chief of the New York Times' cooking section. "We've already seen the average rating of all our recipes go up by about three quarters of a star."

At press time, critics were investigating the effects of "dousing" home cooked dishes in high-end hot sauces and artisanal chili oils.

White Person Dying To Show You Clip From 'How I Met Your Mother'

Local white junior Matthew White was reportedly seen pestering his roommate Arjun Khan by saying he was "dying" to show him a clip from hit sitcom How I Met Your Mother that was only tangentially related to their original conversation.

"Just yesterday, Matthew was ranting to me about something that happened in his class, which he for some reason had to do by breaking into a musical number," reported Khan. "Anyway, I wasn't really paying attention so I just said 'damn, that's crazy.' And then Matthew got this insane glint of recognition in his eye and said that he just had to show me the 'Hot/Crazy Scale' scene from HIMYM, which I have learned against my will is the abbreviation for How I Met Your Mother."

White had allegedly spent ten minutes trying to find the clip on YouTube, after getting distracted by other HIMYM clips and funny moments compilations on his home page. After the two roommates soundlessly watched the one minute long video, White said "OMG so true. Ugh, I'm such a Barney." Before Khan could comment, White had already pressed play on the next automatically recommended video which was also a HIMYM clip.

"I just want to state for the record that Matthew is nothing like the effortlessly charming and dapper Barney, at least from what I know about these characters," said Khan. "However, he has said that I am exactly like Ranjit, who is apparently the Indian chauffeur."

At press time, Khan agreed to watch exactly one full length episode with White, in an effort to better understand and connect with white culture.

China Leaders Thankful U.S. Losing Global Support Without Them Needing To Do Anything

As the share of people across the world who view the U.S. positively plummets, reports from the Chinese Communist Party indicate that President Xi Jinping and other senior party officials are "thankful" that the U.S. is permanently and thoroughly destroying its international image without the CCP having to spend billions of yuan dispersing anti-U.S. propaganda worldwide.

CCP spokeswoman Lin Jian explained that it would have been "incredibly time-consuming and expensive to make people hate the U.S." She went on to appreciate that the American government did the work for them by generously pulling out of 66 multilateral international organizations and halting billions of dollars in food and medical aid to poverty-stricken countries.

"Decades worth of international goodwill has evaporated within the last year, and I'm not sure why the U.S. is continuing to shit the bed and make themselves look unreliable and unstable," a Chinese netizen posted to Xiaohongshu without having first seen any feed-pushed anti-U.S. propaganda. "China would never go to war with a politically independent island over frivolous territorial claims."

At press time, Xi was seen deciding whether he wanted butter or white cheddar flavored popcorn to watch America's undoing.

"Apolitical" Punk Band Releases Songs Discussing Weather, Food, Hating Women

Self-proclaimed "apolitical" punk band The Floor Pissers has been climbing the charts in the last week, thanks to a handful of songs that have found viral success. According to frontman Jimmy "The Piss" Parsons, the band hopes to bring the genre "back to the good old days when punk music was just about having fun," with songs covering topics such as weather, food, and how terrible women are in every regard.

"Other punk bands these days," explains Parsons, "they're all singing about this social justice crap. They're saying that we gotta fight back against the government and the police. What's next? Rebelling against your own parents? Punk didn't used to be anything like that! There were never any bands trying to tell us to rage against some machine! That's why our songs aren't about any political bullshit. The new single drops this Friday, and it's just about this bitch ex-girlfriend that I want dead. Real classic stuff."

Among The Floor Pissers' biggest hits are "Taco Truck," a 57 second head-banger about ordering tacos, "Cumulonimbus," a 42 second track consisting of Parsons yelling the names of various types of clouds, and "Get on the Floor" (stylized in all caps), a four minute track with lyrics demanding that a woman "sit the fuck down, because I'm such a lonely chud, I'd rather stab you to death, than see you with that stud." The song concludes with a scream that blows out the audio: "WOMEN BELONG IN THE KITCHEN."

"I just like it because it appeals to everyone," says Piss-head John Dalton. "There's no lame agenda, it just rocks. Like Green Day or the Dead Kennedys."

At press time, The Floor Pissers were seen pissing on the floor.

The Floor Pissers' next album will be about living in Mom's basement.

Report: Valentine's Day Invented For People Without Enough Female Friends For Galentine's Day

With Galentine's Day having come and gone, many have called into question how its lesser counterpart, Valentine's Day, was born and the purpose it serves. Anthropologist and sociologist Dr. Teagan Samwell went live this weekend to clarify that Valentine's Day is "like Galentine's Day, but for people who have no female friends."

Area woman Taylor Wilson praised the new holiday, saying, "Yeah, I really wanted to go out and get a drink on February 14th, but unfortunately I didn't have any female friends to celebrate with. So, my stupid boyfriend taking me out to dinner was a small consolation. I mean," Taylor admitted, "it's no mimosas with the girls, but at least it's something."

Local Walmart employee Emily Jackson adds that, "Our store even started selling stuffed bears and chocolate roses as pity gifts for those who can't celebrate Galentine's Day. The other week some poor soul came in and left with three heart-shaped boxes of truffles. All I could think when checking him out was how he definitely wasn't invited to sushi with his day-ones."

"It doesn't help," Dr. Samwell explained, "that so much of our culture is geared towards female friendships. There are so many movies made to be watched on Galentine's Day: Bridesmaids, Booksmart, etc. I think it's important that we start expanding some of that interest into Valentine's Day."

At press time, Valentine's Day enjoyers were seen sadly flipping through Galentine's Brunch Instagram stories.

Spirit To Charge Extra For In-Flight Oxygen

On Tuesday, Spirit Airlines announced that they will begin charging for in-flight oxygen as a "premium experience" for jetsetters.

"Starting in March, Spirit customers will have the option to upgrade to in-flight oxygen when purchasing a ticket on our website or via a third party. They can also opt to upgrade later, for a slightly higher fee, when checking in for their flight," said Spirit President and CEO Dave Davis in a press release.

Customers who select the upgrade will be provided an oxygen mask at their seat. While the "basic" option includes "enough to sustain life," Spirit encourages those with breathing issues, heart conditions, and the elderly and pregnant are advised to opt for the "O2+" or "PlatinumAir" which guarantee a stronger and more stable flow for a small fee.

Passengers who opt not to upgrade will be required to sign a waiver that they are liable for all lightheadedness and hypoxia that might be contracted during the ride. Davis explained that, "customers are highly encouraged to hold their breath for the duration of the flight," although outside air masks and canisters remain prohibited due to FAA regulations on aerosols.

Spirit also announced that passengers will not be permitted to bring more than 100 milliliters of breathable gases in their carry-on.

At press time, Spirit's technology team was seen updating the first-class amenities list to include toilet paper.

Ha Ha Why Are You Spinning Yourself

By: World

Get a load of this guy. He comes home from the bar thinking he can sleep, but whoa! He thinks he's spinning. He's lying completely flat, and yet he's saying I'm spinning him. Well, two can play at this game. What a dummy. Whoa, I'm spinning left, now I'm spinning right, and, oh ew gross, now you threw up. At least you got it on your roommate's side of the room, good job. You thought it was over now? Look at me, I'm still spinning. Why are you spinning yourself? Why are you spinning yourself?

And oh, there we go again, you threw up. Aw, this time you got it all over yourself. What an idiot. Why don't you go to the bathroom and clean that up? I'll give you a break. You know, I really hate to see you like this. Oh, but you thought I would let you get back from the bathroom all easy peasy lemon squeezy?

Nah, I'm spinning again. What can I say? It's funny to see you bounce off the walls. You look like a bumper car or something. Oh, you really think holding on to the railing can stop me?

That's funny. Here's an extra big spin just so you fall over like the moron you are. It's really too easy. Alright, whatever, I'll let you catch some Zs. See you next Thursday, champ.

"You Talkin' To Me?"

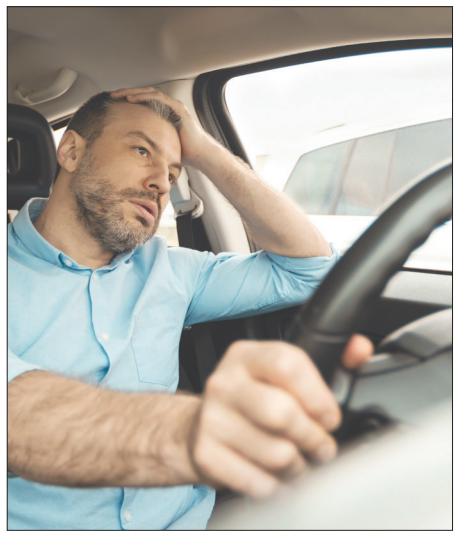
By: Lyft Driver Who Thinks He's Robert DeNiro In 'Taxi Driver'



Are you talkin' to me? Alright, I'll bite. They say that being a campus Lyft driver is an easy gig. Pick up students, drop off students, drive away, make a little chit-chat, pretty simple, eh? Well, for your information, they couldn't be further from the truth….

All of the animals of Ann Arbor come out at night. The pre-meds, the pre-laws, the pre-unemployed… this city is crawling with pretentious filth. Someday a real rain will come and wash all the scum off these well-salted streets…

Now, I'm not saying I'm some kind of hero, the last sane guy in a town that's gone down the drain. But I notice things, see things that have changed me, things that you couldn't even fathom. From welcome week to finals week, I am the silent observer… the quiet machinator behind your silly little 'night life'…

I nobly shuttle pompous bums like you around all night while I could be doing… uh… my own shit. You all should feel lucky that there's lonely, recently unemployed, outcast saps like me out there that are willing to run this racket.

Oh, we're already here at Bursley? Have a nice night. Please consider giving me a five star rating.

It Gets Me Every Time!

By: A Baby Playing Peek-A-Boo

How does she do it? How does she manage to make me giggle and drool every time she reveals her wide-eyed, gleefully smiling face to me? You think the gimmick would have died already, but gosh, this is just the funniest thing in the world. Everytime I think I know what's gonna happen, I'm shocked all over again. This absolutely beats a fresh diaper change or a tickle session. It won't ever get old!

It was hilarious even before I gained object permanence. Though in those first five months of my life, my reactions were sort of out of shock instead of amusement, y'know? When she would disappear out of existence behind those hands, it honestly kinda scared the shit out of me, which was much to the disgruntlement of my big folks.

It's just one of her many tricks, too! I obsess over a good pat-a-cake, tummy time, or a baby mobile as I drift into a five hour nap with my Blanky. How does she know what charms me so?

Oh, she's about to do it again! How else will I react this time? Reach out my arms? Kick my feet? Sneeze out a booger, hiccup out of excitement, projectile vomit? I'm not sure yet, but I can guarantee it will once again be the most entertaining thing I've ever experienced.
